Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Wednesday 14 Apr 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
A bright start with scattered showers during the afternoon.

Today:
After a bright and chilly start, cloud will soon build giving way to scattered showers, heavy at times, throughout the day. However, it will feel pleasant under any sunny intervals. Maximum temperature 13 deg C (55 deg F).

Tonight:
Any showers will soon fade away during the evening to leave drier conditions overnight with clear spells. Another cold night, with frost and fog patches forming under the clearest skies. Minimum temperature -1 deg C (30 deg F).

Thursday:
A largely dry day for most with sunny spells, though the odd shower is possible in the west of the region. Feeling pleasant in the sunshine. Maximum temperature 12 deg C (54 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Sunny spells and light winds on Friday and Saturday. Outbreaks of light rain may affect the region on Sunday. Remaining cold overnight with frost and fog patches possible.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.